A Diplomatic Exchange Across the Suez Canal

An interesting first official exchange on reopening the Suez Canal has taken place between Egypt and Israel. In Cairo, Premier Sadat said he would clear and reopen the waterway "for international navigation" if -within 30 days-Israeli forces were to make "a partial withdrawal... as a first stage of a timetable that will be prepared later to implement the other provisions of the Security Council resolution." In Jerusalem. Premier Meir quickly offered to "hold discussions with Egypt on arrangements for opening the canal... to free international shipping for all states, including Israel." Israel "would even willingly discuss proposals aimed at leading to normalization of civilian life in that area, and mutual de-escalation of the military confrontation," she added. "But does the president of Egypt believe that it is possible to carry out the work of clearing the canal while the threat to renew the war is still in force?"

Clearly, Ambassador Jarring, whose task it will be to match up these quite different approaches, has his work cut out for him. To take Mr. Sadat at his initial word, Egypt wants Israel to abandon a significant military position (and the bargaining leverage which retention of it bestows) without any assurance of compensating political gain. Doubtless he has been egged on by the Kremlin, which wants easier passage to the Indian Ocean; and he hopes to enlist the backing of those Western countries which see in the reopening of Suez their own easier access to oil. Aside from the obvious purpose of starting to clear its territory of Israeli troops, Egypt has further good commercial and political reasons to want the canal opened. Thereby it could regain its former position in world commerce: The longer it waits, the deeper the world settles into other shipping and shipbuilding patterns. And thereby Premier Sadat could stick a bright political feather in his cap, and also perhaps relieve himself of some of the pressure he now feels to regain "all" occupied territory.

On her part, Mrs. Meir's purpose is not so much the peacetime ose of the canalthough that would be of great symbolic value—as the "selling" of it back to Egypt for a high political price. She would like to exploit the Egyptian canal initiative in order (1) to draw Cairo into substantive talks, if not direct talks; (2) to knit reopening of the waterway into "a framework of agreed arrangements for the absolute termination of the war" and (3) meanwhile to get Egypt to halt its threats to resume fighting.

In this contest of national wills and negotlating strategies, the United States is sure to have a role. Reluctant as some Washington officials may be to expedite Soviet access to the Indian Ocean and Persian Gulf, the dominant element in American thinking plainly is to help arrange an Arab-Israeli settlement and, of course, to avert a Soviet-American confrontation growing out of that regional dispute. An Israeli-Egyptian Suez agreement would suit those larger purposes well. Now that Cairo and Jerusalem have both indicated their common interest in finding a way to reopen the canal, it would seem wise to leave them be and let them try to work one out.

A Suez agreement, even if confined to that at the outset, would be a major contribution to regional peace. Merchant ships moving up and down the canal, which then would no longer be bristling with guns on its two banks, would make up a useful kind of peace force. The United States might later consider joining with other interested countries, including the Soviet Union, to see whether they could enhance the stability of an agreement worked out by the parties immediately concerned.

Nixon's Gamble

Nixon's gamble rests on an almost unlimited confidence in the Saigon army. Nixon's principal pledge is that, whatever. happens, U.S. forces will not intervene on the ground. The temptation will be great for Hanol to make him lose his gamble. Nixon appears to be betting all or nothing. The name Dien Bien Phu is mentioned in many commentaries. It is difficult to see how the American high command could watch passively a South Vietnamese rout in Laos. But if Nixon had to intervene with American troops regardless of his promises, the reaction of public opinion might sweep him away overnight.

-From Le Figaro (Paris).

* * * By insisting on the necessity of a political solution in Indochina, President Pompidou actually suggested a reactivation of the Geneva conference of 1962. Up to now, the Chinese and North Vietnamese were opposed to this. The South Vietnamese invasion of Laos may paradoxically lead them to revise their positions if the Peking government seeks the opportunity to make a spectacular comeback on the international scene.

-From Les Echos (Paris).

Washington continoes to underestimate its adversary. The armed U.S. intervention in Indochina has caused the peoples of Vietnam. Each operation waged in the Plaine des Jarres or in the sooth is preceded by the forced displacement of thousands of peasants. The Lao people are redoced to silence. They are only three million, and American official documents recently showed that the majority of Meos living in sectors controlled by the right have been sacrificed in the aubious fight waged from the CIA bases in Samthong and Long Cheng. It is in Laos that American aid reaches, by far, its highest level, bot this also applies to the tonnage of bombs. There is not much hope a law-enforcement tool. that the few remaining opposed voices will be heeded.

It is not only what the ABA did at Chicago that hurts; it is also what it did not do. First, these officers of the courts and supposed guardians of citizens' rights voted that even when the federal government eavesdrops without a court warrant in a foreign intelligence case, the fruits of the eavesdropping are admissible in Arguing for this proposition, a former ABA president, Lewis F. Powell ir., pointed out that it was only logical; if it is held that the government can lawfully eavesdrop without a warrant, then it follows that the evidence thus gathered also has been made lawful. This presupposes that Congress was right in the first place to given defendants broader rights to grant the power to esvesirop without court permission, Powell's

Ouestionable Tool

In fact, there is much evidence to suggest that eavesdropping is often a wasteful and inefficient procedure, and the kind of crutch that deters development of more effective law enforcement; whatever else it is, eavesdropping is certainly a grab-bag search procedure in which the possibilities of abuse (particularly by corrupt and inefficient local forces) are inherent and rarely outweighed by productive results.

But having gone so far, the ABA went further; it rejected three proposals that would have urged states enacting exvestrop laws to place the practice under stricter regulation than the federal rules. One of these proposals would have pre-trial disclosure of prosecution evidence obtained by cavesdropping,

This item was not even on the agenda at Chicago. Yet, no issue of individual rights of such importance has arisen in America years, if ever, because the Mitchell doctrine gives the federal government the literal power to eavesdrop. on anyone it chooses, without ever disclosing or justifying to anyone -neither a court nor the subjectthe fact that it has done so. It does no good to argue that the government could, in any case, do this illegally; the Mitchell doctrine would make the practice accepted and routine, as well as legitimate. Nor does it make any difference to contend that neither Mitchell nor President Mixon would condone misuse of such eavesdropping powers. Probably not, but who might next hold their offices and be given such unchecked and unlimited powers of surveillance? Two federal district course have overruled the attorney general, but he is appealing, and the issue remains in doubt. But even if the courts save us from this most dangerous of the wiretap threats, the ABA's actions and lack of ac tion suggest an inexorable spreading of electronic surveillance by police and other officials.

WARRINGTON These were 16 good reasons against doing it, and there were only two reasons for doing it. But if you analyzed them, the two reasons for com-pletely outweighed the 16 against -which were mostly domestic political reasons anyway." This is how President Minon himself explains his second great Southeast Asian gamble-to support the current, critically significant South Vietnamese drive across the border of Laos. The two reasons that outwelched all the rest in the President's mind can be easily summerized.

The first reason was the need to force the Hanoi war-planners to take the hardest kind of hard new look at their own situation and future prospects. A new look in Hanci will hardly be avoidable, if the Leos trails are cut in the area around the little town of Tchepone which is the obvious aim of the hig effort now in pro-

The News Embargo

Another effect of the President's decision, one must add, is to underline the sheer ludicrousness that has so long pervaded most discussion of the Vietnamese war in this country. Take the howls about Gen. Abrams's famous "news embargo," for example.

To begin with, no sensible reporter ought ever to wish to describe in tietail and in advance any forthcoming military opera-tion. Doing so jeopardizes the lives of every man engaged in that operation. This supposedly wicked embargo evidently left Harrot utierly uncertain about where the blow would come. Otherwise there would have been a very nasty welcoming committee for the South Vietnamese the moment they crossed the Laos border.

Yet there is a far better, and far more depressing example of the folly many people have indulged in during these last years. You simply need to calculate what would have happened if the same changes in the lunatic rules of the war had been made four years ago. There could have been no Tet offensive, to begin with.

For it is now well established, by computing actual bills of lading picked up in Sihanoukville, that the Cambodian lifeline was vital to the Tet plan. It's a Shorts Story For Elizabeth Taylor

By Hebe Dorsev

LONDON, Feb. 11.—Elizabeth Taylor in shorts?

"I adore them," she giggled, tand so does my husband.

Her husband, Richard Burton, approved, with one small reservation. "I adore them on Blizabeth, I can tell you that." he said over a huge plate of moules marinière. "It's going to look ludierous on a great many girls. but I love hot pants on my wife."

The shorts Miss Taylor was wearing were on the minuscule side, of purple suede and topped by a hot pink pon-cho. Purple tights and boots give them a triumphantly sexy appeal. The shorts are part of the wardrobe of "Zee & Cie." the film she's making at Shepperton Studios. A Columbia production, directed by Brian G. Hutton, with a screenplay by Edna O'Brien, it has Elizabeth Taylor (Zee) locked in a turbulent, love - hate relationship with her successful archi-tect husband, Michael Caine. When he falls in love with a young designer (Suzannah York), Zee fights back tooth and nail.

Beatrice Dawson designed the film's wardrobe which, as the publicity people put it, is far out and witty." Miss Dawson thinks Miss Taylor looks fine in shorts. "She wears them very well because she has a slim behind and very good

Her Philosophy

So, how does Miss Taylor look in shorts? Never mind the best-dressed list. Miss Taylor knows exactly what clothes are all about. To attract the men, that's what they're for. And Miss Taylor, no doubt about that, attracts them coming and going, with computer precision.

The other day, as she walked into Ye Olde Kings Head, at Walton on Thames, for lunch, she had Archie, the roly-poly innkeeper, positively purring with pleasure. She was wearing Vicki-designed yellow shorts with snakeskin boots

She calls fashion "the biggest con game in the history of the world. Look at what happened to the midi. It flopped-because of the men. I never liked the midi. The maxi could be all right if it was done in the

Picasso Gives Modern Art Museum Rare Cubist Sculpture 'Guitar'

By Hilton Kramer

NEW. YORK, Feb. 11 (NYT).—Pablo Picasso has given the Museum of Modern Art one of the rarest sculptures of the classic cubist period. "Guitar" (1912), a construction made of sheet metal and wire that virtually changed the history of sculpture in Picasso said after a meeting Monday that he felt the "Guitar" was most appropriate for the museum since it was this work that marked the very heginning of the entire constructive style. Guitar" will go on public exhibition at the museum, as part of an exhibition of recent acquisitions, some time next month. The exhibition is also reported to include an important Picasso painting

William S. Rubin, chief curator of the museum's painting and museum's painting and sculpture committee, had met with the artist in his home in Cannes earlier this week to discuss his possible willingness to part with certain examples of his constructed sculpture.

This aspect of Picasso's vast artistic production is not represented in any museum in the world. One small cubist construction was sold years ago by Picasso to his British biographer, Roland Penrose.

On the Arts Agenda.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct all the symphonies of Mahler and Brahms with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra as one of the main projects of a six-year contract of the orchestra with the Austrian Radio and Television, A co-producer will be Unitel, which has Bernstein under contract, and it is planned that all productions will become available on color-TV cassettes.

The first performance of Betsy Jolas's "Lassus Ricera work for brass, harp. piano and percussion based on a theme of Roland de Lassus, will be given Feb. 15 at the mill 10:30 a.m.

Paris Theatre de la Ville by the 30 Roe du Pristemps. 227-2477, Paris-172.

Domaine Musical, which commissioned it. Also on the program are György Ligeti's Cham-ber Concerto for 13 instruments, a French premiere, and a group of works by Luciano Berio. Gilbert Amy and Berio will conduct. The same program will be given Feb. 17 at the Maison de la Culture in Grenoble, and the following day in Grenoble an additional concert of other works by Berio is scheduled, with soprano Cathy Berberian.

"I think you should wear what your old man likes. After all, he's the poor sucker who's paying for it."

The old-time fashion designers have had it, according to Miss Taylor. Women don't want to be told any more. Be-sides, who is Mr. Dior to say that books are in or out? It's kind of silly, isn't it? Either you have them or you don't."

By now, it is clear that Miss Taylor's approach to clothes is earthy; to her they are nothing but a vehicle, window dressing at best. Her fashion equation is simple. It's best summed in in these lines from "Zee," addressed to Miss York, a chic, skinny fashion designer: "Real men don't like skinny women -they only think they do because they're supposed to look better in clothes. But what happens when the clothes come off and you get between the sheets on a cold winter night? Then they want something

Noel Coward: 'Elephants Often Consult Me'

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss T ONDON .- "No. I certainly shan't have anything mild!" said Noel Coward, flicking the ash of his eigerette discainfully. "I shall have that line, old navy beverage: A horse's neck. A large one." He sat elegant and erect in a low armchair in his riverside suite at the Savoy. The past year has been eventful for Mr. Coward. It has brought him a long-expected knighthood, On Christmas Eve he celebrated his 71st birthday. The year has also seen the publication of his biography by Sheridan Morley. This has its subject's official sanction, but there is much more of the Coward story to be told and he is about to tell some more of it

"I fly to Jamaica in the morning," he announced. "There sunshine and hard labor await me I must write the third volume of my autobiography. I have cleared the decks for this, putting aside all other work short stories and playwriting. I fancy it should be done in three or four months."

The first of three volumes, "Present Indicative," published just before World War II, relat-ed his life to 1830. The second, Future Indefinite," concerned the war years.

"I have found a title for the

The time effacers, as I have elsewhere described them, like certain seahirds, follow the storms of history. "Make the revolution," cry the followers of the New Left. "Afterward we will decide what to do with it." The words are supposed to mark the end of the fathers and of all linkage to the past. At a private dinner to which I was invited a few months ago, a young firebrand con-fronted me across the table. "Dr. Elseley," he said, in the soft candle glow that caused the words to wound more deeply: "Do you know why I and my generation hate you and your generation? Because you could speak to your parents. We can-

Rules for Taming

Man has been called a selfdomesticated animal. But there ere rules for taming, end man is still too uncivilized to quite accept them. A fox once interpreted the whole matter to a little prince who happened to tell it to a famous writer, Antoine de Saint-Exupery. Very few people below 30, or above 30, have taken time to listen, and that is why we are talking

The for had uttered a frightening truth: You become responsible forever for what you

so much ebout the generation

hare tamed. The burden is mede worse in man because the two generations have to help each other. Neither can master the task alone. Here, however, the fox gave some final advice to the friends who wished to tame him. "You must be very patient," the fox said. First you will alt down a little distance from me in the crass. I shall look at you out of the corner of my eye, and you will say nothing. Words are the source of misunderstandings. but you will sit a little closer to me, every day."

The for then proceeded to explain the odvantages of certain rites, rituals and times of ap-pearance that belp in this deli-cate civilizing process, but which ogoin arouse human impatience so that they are de-cried belligerently in colleges all over the land.

We have much to learn from the fox. It will take many ages to achieve the full taming of everyone but it is the most profound enterprise man has ever launched. It involves also the taming of nations, who are only enlarged men. Man began his domestication unconsciously when be used words and spoke across the generations. This is what he sought when he kent his children about him and no longer drove them away into the forest. But the children, too. partook of the taming. They had to wish to stay. Therefore there were times when they learned the ritual of silence between the generations ond the peace that sometimes comes unspoken into the heart.

Taming, which is true civilzation, has nothing to do with the Now, or with Relevance. It has only to do with growing. If the taming fails, then so does man, and man will be responsible forever just as the fox advised the prince.

'The Perfectibility of Man Is All That We Have to Sustain Us...'

By John Leonard

WHO'S got the revolution? When Christopher Jencks and David Riesman published the first of a projected two-volume study of American colleges and universities three years ago, they called it "The Academic Revolution." What they meant by "revolution" was the change of emphasis in our universities—from undergraduate general education to graduate school professionalism; from teaching to research,

"Revolution" is one of those words that should be available to writers only on application, issued like a hunting license with an expiration date. If indeed there has been any revolution in the academy, it began when the Jencksian shift of emphasis ended, at that point where the university became a trade school, an accomplice in government policy and a corporation, instead of a seat of intel-

Saving Souls and Relevance

College students-a flood of them, many airaid to leave because of the draft, many simply there because they could conceive of no place else to go, many recruited in an attempt at social engineering, began asking of the university what it was unprepared to provide; a viable community and a sense of personal selvation. Fashioning a community from fixed (faculty and administration) and transient (student) populations is difficult; saving souls is impossible, at least for deans and English professors.

But saving souls became the demand on ona side of student discontent; "relevance became the demand on the other side. The psychological and the political made for a

Students looked for prophets whose ideas of revolution were more liberating than a change of emphasis, They rediscovered Faul Goodman, calling for an end to formal educasystem. Not colleges, but all schools were per-ceived to be mechanisms of social control, combinations of baby-sitter, prison and assembly-

Goodman even disapproved of the teaching of English: "Society is increasingly taken to be a kind of machine directed by a central will, and in this structure the teaching of English is turned into social engineering. The purpose of learning is no longer political free-dom, clarification, appreciation, and community, but functional literacy, the shillty to follow directions and be employable."

Along came Edgar Friedenberg: "Public education is supported because it is believedby now, indeed, assumed—to be assential to the maintenance of development of society and the induction of its younger members. It rests on a degree of legal coercion of an entire agegroup of individuals otherwise unparalleled in our society; there are no deferments from school itself, for any reason. Yet schooling consists only in the organization of experiences and their administration to the young by a professional bureaucracy in a setting provided for that purpose, Compulsory schooling proceeds on the assumption that what young people do or have done to them in these buildings, under the control and guidance of whool personnel, is so much more valuable—to society, if not to themselves—than any other set of experiences they might have that they are required by law to submit to school regimes for at least 10 years of their lives."

What Ivan Illich has called "consumer resis tance... in the knowledge industry" is upon us. Education is being redefined. As another new prophet like George Dennison puts it: "There is no such thing as learning except [as Dewey tells us] in the continuum of experience, But this continuum cannot survive in the class room unless there is reality of encounter between the soults and the children. The teachers must be themselves, and not play roles. They must teach the children, and not teach 'subjects.' The experience of learning is an experience of wholeness. The child feels the unity of hi own powers and the continuum of persons. His parents, his friends his teachers, and the vague human shapes of his future form one world for him, and he feels the adequacy of his powers within this world.

Anything short of this wholeness is not true

Credos Basically Romantic

Joseph L. Featherstone went to England for The New Republic, and returned with a superb series of articles on allowing children to teach themselves "subjects" or relationships the way they taught themselves their native language. John Holt emphasized the creative role of exploration, the civil liberties of children, a teacher's obligation to listen. Caleb Gattegno, one of the early advocates of Culsenaire rods for teaching mathematics and the deviser of a system of colored letters for teaching reading, introduced a form of game-theory to ghetto classrooms with amazing success. George B. Leonard fantasized about a utopian marriage of encounter groups and technological gadgets, Ronald Gross argued for community control of the schools and "accountability." Charles E. Silberman summed up the situation in most American schools as "joyless,"

Save our souls. With the possible, but not probable, exception of Silberman, the new prophets are romantics. They believe in the perfectibility of man, They see the schoolsat least education—as an agency of moral uplift and social change, perhaps because schools on every level are more vulnerable to pressure than any other institution in our society, but more likely because the notion of a child being perfected corresponds so closely to the romantic dream of man, the perfectible, For the generation of professors brought up on Durkheim and Matthew Arnold, resigned to institutions and wary of all but slow reform the idea of salvation by education is preposterous. One professor from a major Eastern university was heard, at the recent Chicago meetings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, to observe: "I think we made a mistake by ever being scared of them." By them," he meant coilege students; by "we," faculty and administration. After several years of demonstrations, disruptions and strikes on campus; after hundreds of committee meetings and reports; after thousands of manifestos on making everything from biology to English lit-erature "relevant," this professor had found his students last fall to be passive and incurious. And he had tried. Once upon a time, "they had scared him, and his moment of fear had been therapeutic. In the emotional dishabille of confrontation, he had discovered things about himself - presumptions, indifferences not altogether admirable. Consequently, ha had sone about redesigning his course to render it more relevant. And now the students no longer seemed to care. And now the professor was He is right and he is wrong. He is right, because students—aged 8 or 18—weren't born knowing everything, only gradually to forget it the older they grow. He is wrong because the romantic notion of the perfectibility of man is really all we have to sustain us, however illusory it may prove to be. Education is society's business, but society must decide what it wants, what it wants to be, where it wants to go, nefore it can devise a jearning system appropriate to its own aspiration. That we baven't, of course, decided. Until we do so, the rest is rhetoric, and the romantics have the best

NEWS AND NOTES

Big Board Rates

The Securities & Exchange Commission said the New York Stock Exchange "should take immediate action to implement hy April 1 negotiated rates on large institutional orders." The SEC said it had no objections if the NYSE set competitive rates on portions of orders over $100,000 but the point at which competitive rates should commence should not exceed $500,000. The SEC said the action was taken in light of substantial changes in trading patterns... and to gain further experience with competitive rates."

Eurodollar Borrowings Eurodollar borrowings by U.S. banks from their foreign branches dropped $138 million in the week ended Feb. 3, bringing liabilities outstanding to $6.399 billion, the Federal Reserve reported The drop follows a $1.29 billion decline the previous week, which was exceptionally large because of the $1 billion that went into U.S. Export-Import Bank securities.

London Exchange Acts The London Stock Exchange Council has auspended the bro-kerage firm of A. Carroll-Marx and Co. from trading, Tha Council said the suspension is effective pending clarification of the firm's financial position. The announcement follows recent speculation that several stock exchange firms were experiencing financial difficulties dua to the sharp decline in Australian mine issues.

France's Output Jumps The French index of industrial production, seasonally adjusted and excluding the building industry, increased to 162

(1962 equals 100) in December from 191 in November, the Fi-nance Ministry announced. Por all of 1970, industrial production increased 5.9 percent, compared with a rise of 5 percent in 1989 from 1968. Recording the higgest increases were: automo-biles, up 13.4 percent: natural gas and petroleum products, 11.2 percent; electrical engineering, 10.5 percent; chemicals and ruober, 84 percent.

U.S. Retail Sales Climb Retail sales in the United States last month totaled a sea-sonally-adjusted $30.79 billion, up I percent from December's 330.4 billion and 4 percent ahead of the year-earlier's $29.57 billion, the U.S. Commerce Department said. January sales of durable goods totaled $9 billion, up from December's $8.6; billion and $8.89 billion in Jan-uary, 1970. Sales of nondurables at $31.77 billion trailed December's $21.83 billion, but surpassed the year-earlier's

$20.68 billion. No Bar to U.S. Merger

A weliminary analysis of the proposed American-Western airline merger has not produced any reasons for the Department of Transportation to oppose the merger before the Civil Aeronantics Board, assistant secretary Charles D. Baker told the Senate Commerce Committee. Mr. Baker said the department would probably oppose any merger that would leave the surviving airline with 25 percent or more of domestic passenger traffic. The first analysis in-dicated that American would have about 20 percent of the total U.S. market after the merger and that competition would be eliminated only on about 15 major routes,

Small Investors' Infatuation With Wall Street Is Cooling

DJ).-Most small investors in common stocks in the United States plan to continue buying stocks, but a significant minority intend to stay out of the market, the Wall Street Journal reports.

A nationwide Trender 1uc. survey made for the Journal shows that of investors who have made transactions within the past two years, 28 percent said they definitely or probably will not invest again. Among investors who have not traded in the past two years, the figure is 46 percent. The survey was of 1,000 persons earning $10,000 or more a year. Or course, in a falling market

A majority of top-ranking ex-perts and a substantial number of tournament enthusiasts use 'limit jump raises."

In this style, three spades in response to one spade is an invitation to reach game rather then a guarantee. A problem is thereby created when the re-sponder has good support for the opener's suit and the values for an opening hid himself—a hand suitable for a traditional forcing jump raise. A popular solution is to use a three no-trump response conventionally to show this type of hand. This conventional response was used by North on the diagramed deal.

After the three no-trump response. South would normally bid four spades, ending the suction. The four-heart bid showed a side-suit and implied slam ambitions. North judged his controls good enough to raise the hearts and then continue to six spades when his partner signed off in five spades. West donbled.

The declarer was immediately in control when West led the club king.

The king was captured by the ace, and a heart was discarded. A loser-on-loser play was then made: The club jack was led and another heart was discarded. West won with the queen, and shifted to a trump. South won with the spade ace in dummy, and discarded her heart queen on the club ten. This paved the way for the development of a heart trick in dummy, thus removing the necessity to finesse in diamonds. A heart was led to the ace ruffed and dummy's spade nine was used as snother entry to permit a second heart ruff. This established the heart ten as a winner, and it provided a discard for the diamond queen, with the spade king available as the final entry.

T will be said—in fact I have aiready heard it said—that "Michael Douglas's" novel "Deal-ing" is a new breed of booka unique excursion into Head Country, into the hearts and minds of America's spaced-out youth. And that it's strictly for the lotus-enters, because its heroes turn on and its vilkins are narcotics agents, parents and other squares, But I wonder.

Admittedly, the novel has all the scales of Puff the Magic Dragon. Its hero and narrator is a semidropout who earns money in his spare time toting bundles of cash from Boston to Berkeley and running back bricks of Mexico's finest. It is filled with inside news and ter-minology. (A "brick," for in-stance, is two pounds or so of compacted, space-saving, easily portable marijuana). When its plot stumbles, or time must be lapsed, it blows out insights on righteous highs; on why the marcs waste America's time, money and moral nerve charing small-time grass-dealers instead of the big-bad hard-stuff pushers; on why parents just don't understand; and on other artifacts of youthcuit. "Dealing" is all the rage.

And admittedly, it is enterisining—slick and cool and savvy. It races along as smoothly as a Flexible Flyer on snow. Michael Crichton—who is half its author and is best known for "The Andromeda Strain" and "Five Patients"—has brought to it all the plotspinning tricks he presumably picked up writing mysteries under the noms de phime Jeffrey Hudson and John Lange. And whatever Douglas Crichton, his younger brother thence "Michael Douglas"), contributed, it hasn't hurt. But I wonder all the same if "Dealing" is really a drug-cul-ture book, because if you stop and think about it, it's as square as a carton of boose. After all, when the going gets rough and the plot sticky, the characters blow the smoke away and act as tough, vindictive and romantic as Bogle in the '40s. And when "Michael Douglas" gets down to the fag-end of the plot and has to wind things up, "he" resurts to trumpery straight out of Dick Tracy's Sunday best.

OR, so it doesn't matter that much. So 'Dealing' was only meant to be fun-Heads and Narra instead of Cops and Robbers. Let's just not pretend it's anything more. And let any Head who digs it realize he's caught in the old, old game of power.

If you're seriously concerned with drugs (as who isn't these days, one way or the other), read Peter Marin's and Allan Y. Cowen's "Understanding Drug Use: An Adult's Guide to Drugs and the Young." The title may sound like just one more of those timely projects dreamed up by bored editors for the Monday-morning coffee wagon; but this one is special-very much worth putting on the bookshell for future reference and even more worth reading now.

It's worth saving for consults tion because it's filled with practical information—a bibliography, a list of films on the subject of drug problems, a glossary, as well as 40 pages of specific information that clears up confusing terminology and places the hard evidence on harmful effects in perspective. For instance, cocaine is pharmacologically classified as a "stimulant" rather than a nav-cotic. For instance, marijuana is only one form of Cannabia. and a relatively benign one at that, whose dangers have been grossly exaggerated, the authors believe, but are still not to be trifled with.

The book is even more worth residing because Marin and Cohen acknowledge the present crisis without pushing any panic buttons, and at the same time examine it as a reflection of our society without raising angre fists or dragging in devitheories.

Adolescents simply must explore new territories of experience, the authors contend-must undergo "rites of passage" into adulthood that primitive societies once formally legitimiz-ed, but that we today recoil from with hollow-eyed stares and rigid systems; Since children find outer space cold and unyielding—devoid of the poten-tial wonder that they sense within themselver they turn to foner space and embiason it with drugs. Does this foretell the end of Western Civiliration? Marin and Cohen sak. No, it simply demands more flexibility from parents, more honesty, more trust, more sympathy, more in-felligence, and family discus-sions, respect for children's privacy, a willingness to admit faults and change routines. And community programs, revised concepts of education, dispersal of information on drugs and their effects, counseling on the books. In other words, Mr. Marin and Mr. Cohen-the one a poet and educator, the other a psychologist and disillusioned disciple of Timothy Leary and Richard Alpert—rein in the apocalypse and slow it all down to brass tacks and concrete programs. And in the process communicate a wonderful sense that we are dealing with something human and manageable.

This is an unusual book, the best I have seen in an over-crowded field—a rare blend of vision and practicality.

Four Days in February

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON.—"Whoopee!" shouted Ephraim, "A fourday holiday weekend right in the middle of February!

"It's better than a flat tire Tight in the middle of the New Jersey Turnpike," said Oliver

"Four whole days!" Ephraim enthused. He was good at enthusing, "What will you do with them?

"In the middle of February?" Ollver pondered. "Well, I might—." His sentence ended short of an idea, and he pondered again. "I might take the whole family to Cape Cod." enthused Ephraim. "It's been a long time since they've been to the beach. We'd all come back to the job next Tuesday radiant with giowing frostburns."

"Four days in the middle of February." Oliver muttered. No matter how hard he pondered, it was a hard concept to grasp. "Or we might hit the ski slopes and fracture & few bones to celebrate." Ephraim enthused.

Oliver pondered that one. He hated fractures.

"With four whole days, I might just pile the whole family in the old family cor and set out across America to see the rain and snow and sleet and hail," enthused Ephrain, "Why, with luck, we could even get marooned in twelve-foot snow drifts on an interstate highway and have a great experience in human survival."

Oliver's ponderings were wracked by a shudder. "You could even sit home for four whole days watching to see if the thermometer rose," he suggested to Ephrain. "You'd have something to tell your grand-children if it went above 18 degrees."

"We could stay at home and enjoy the city in its emptiness after all the mad holiday celebrants had fled to the beach." enthused Ephraim. "Imagine four whole tranquil days with nothing to do but tramp through the slush and track mud into the living room,"

Oliver pondered the mud, as well as the slush. "I don't sup-pose it would be playing the game to go downtown to the office while the great four-day holiday was in prgress," he pondered.

"Go downtown by all means!" enthused Ephraim. "What better time to enjoy your downtown than a holiday weekend when all the bustling crowds have fled to beach and orthopedic ward! You'll be able to see the local paupers, unprotected against the sleet, shivering so violently they can scarcely hold their pistols while sticking you up."

"I hate to be robbed by a man with a trembling trigger finger. Oliver commented.

"Four whole days!" enthused Ephraim. "In the middle of February."

Oliver pondered.
"Why, I might just stay house and do some good healthy lawn work around the house."

"You could soften up the front lawn by hitting it with an axe," Oliver suggested.

"And t! en, at the end of 'he day, exhausted by honest toil with mother nature, there would be sweet contemplative satisfactions," Ephralm enthused. "Browsing through one's

"In search of the treatment for frostbite," Oliver suggested.

"Or," enthused Ephraim, shaking aside his dreamy mood, "we might all go visit grandfather. Over the hill and through the woods, you know. And in grandfather's little bouse, which he has been unable to leave for the past three months on account of the icy steps and his brittle bones, mother and the children and grandmother and the nogs, and the three cats, and the tropical fish, and the television setthere is grandfather's little house. We can all share granddad's cabin fever, and perhaps join together in a prolooged family scream," Oliver pondered a four-day holiday in the middle of Fenruary at grandfather's little house, and he pondered the screaming. That might be fun, though the dogs would insist on barking, of course.

"Four whole days!" enthused Enhralm. "In the middle of February," pondered Oliver, He began weeping. Enhraim started weeping cothusiastically. They wept and wept some more. "Are you going to weep all

The Marriage Business Is Booming in Reno

By Steven V. Roberts

RENO (NYT).—The bride wore navy blue slacks, a short red jacket over a white blouse, and red sneakers. The groom was in hip-bugging jeans and considerable agony.

"Jeannie brought a dress," said the matron of honor, as the group stood in the corridor of the Washoe County Administration Building. "Why don't you let her change?" But a moment later the wedding party entered the office of the commissioner of civil marriages, apparently having decided to get it over with fast. The four young people sat uneasil; on a vinyl couch until a secretary asked them if they were ready. "No," reolled Donald the groom. "I think I'll go out for lunch." But after a few nervous gizgles everyone got up and entered the chapel, a modest room with a few chairs, some plastic flowers, and the tense sobriety of a funeral home. The deputy commissioner read a service that urged the woman to "inspire" her husband "with courage and true thoughts" and two minutes later the couple was married. "Whooooo." Donald said, clinging very tightly to Jeannie, his 18-year-old bride. Why did they come to Reno to get

"Let's just say," replied Donald, who is 27, "that I don't get along with my mother-in-law." More nervous glegles.
About 100,000 couples will be married in Nevada this year. Most of them, like Jeannie and Donald, are from California. Many once because it is fast and cheap. They can buy a license and get married within ten minutes.

Until last year, justices of the peace here were empowered to perform marriages for a fee, As a result, the justices in Reno and Las Vegas were among the highest paid public officials in the country, averaging $150,000 a year, according to most estimates.

But last year the Nevada legislature passed a law prohibiting the justices in the state's larger towns from officiating at weddings, and created the commissioner of civil marriages instead. As of last month, all that money went into the county general fond and in the first 15 days the commissioner in Reno united 328 couples in holy matrimony, most of them on weekends at $20 per "solemnization."

The new law was a compromise. Some forces wanted to eliminate the ceremony altogether and allow couples merely to sign a contract, but the "wedding lobby" stopped that provision. Marriage, after all, is big business in Nevada, bringing in about $60 million a year.

"It really is sort of a nice part of our joh." said Harry K. Brown, the county clerk, who serves as marriage commissioner and gets only R salary. "Everyone is usually in a gogo mood. But once in a while you issue a license and people have an argument before they leave the counter. You wonder how long they'll stay together."

The justice of the peace in Reno is William Beemer. a sturdy man with gllstening white hair. Over the last 16 years Beemer performed 140,874 marriages. "It's repetitious." he conceded the other day. "But everybody's different."

He added: "I became a much better judge of my fellow man as a result. I learned that you shouldn't be too quick to judge a person. The fact that he might come in wearing a T-shirt or he a bit on the dirty side is no indication of what he's really like."

Beemer has obviously taken a steep cut in pay, down to a salary of $19,000. But he admits that change was coming "for a good many years." Meanwhile, he has his memories—and his savings—to fall back on.

What was Beemer's biggest day? "It was a Saturday, around the Fourth of July in 1955. They had just peased a law putting the district judges out of the marrying business, and it fell upon me to handle all civil weddings. I did 163 in one day, from 8 a.m. to midnight. with only a candy bar for sustenance."

Most cooples. Beemer said proudly. have left his chambers "feeling married" despite the brief ceremony. But some obviously felt the need to make it all seem more permanent. The benches outside the license burean are scarred with names, feeble attempts to make a ripple in the river of humanity which has flowed through these halls.

While Reno's marriage business has been booming, its reputation as the "di-vorce capital" of the world has been ereding steadily. In the first 11 months of 1970, divorces dropped more than 15 percent across the state and more than 20 percent here.

The main reason is that California. New York and other states have passed much more liberal divorce laws in recent years. In addition, more women are working and are less able to spend six weeks in Nevada establishing their resi-

The economic impact has been slight. The hotels and dude ranches that once catered to potential divorcess are now jammed with tourists.

The only really depressed area is the legal profession. When California enacted its new law a prominent attorney here said publicly that it would "kill the racket." The local bar association censured him for his indiscretion, but no one really contradicted him,

"I used to handle 150 divorces a year at $350 spiece," said the lawyer, Howard McKissick ir., "and that's been cut in half. But I've made it up by learning how to try personal injury cases. The more tourists we get, the more injuries we have, and they've more than taken

PEOPLE:

Bald Britons are flying to France in the morning and returning in the evening with heir on their heads. This "tour de scalp" costs them £400, so "we attract the true aristocracy of bald persons," said Nelson Lakin, the brain behind the scheme.

Lakin is principal of the Manhatten company of London which makes hairpleces. The firm is introducing a "while-you-wait" American system of covering hald heads by plastic surgery. Lakin originally intended to run package tours for hair-seekers from London to the Clinique Victor Masté in Paris. But he found bald Roplicants shied away from traveling with other hald people. "It was plain embarrassment." Individual expeditions began this week. So far, three have taken the cure. Another 50 are waiting, says Lakin. Two hundred Frenchmen want the painters surgery, he said. They have to approach the clinic through his company and they get the treatment for £350 because they don't require air transport.

The program, according to Lakin, is this: Land in Paris at 10 a.m., arrive at the clinic by 1.30 p.m., have a physical examination. Then comes skin examination by a dermatologist, preparation of "hair unit" and the 15-minute operation. Home in London in time for tea.

Lakin emphasized the operation is not a hair transplant.

For the Manhatten project Scandinavian or Italian hab is bound and styled and given an artificial root which is planted in the head. It can't grow, but otherwise it's like ordinary hair. It can be shampooed and treated just like your own hair," said Lakin.

Actor George Sanders, who rejoined the Gaber clan last Dec. 4 when he married Magda, has filed suit in Indio, Calif. to nullify the marriage. Sanders, 64, once was married to Magda's sister Zas Zes. Magda and George separated Jan. 5. It was the fifth marriage for

A British technician says computers lose their con when a girl in nylon underweat walks by Harry Eastwood, manager of Leeds University computer laboratory said the otherwise stoleal machines are apt to have their concentration destroyed by static electricity that builds up in nyion undies. Some British firms, he said, now require computer attendants to wear cotton next to the skin. "Nylon underwear, sweaters and overalls can discharge enough static electricity to send a computer haywire."
